JEFFERSON DAVIS.

He is Visited by a Confederate Officer.

How Mr. Davis Looks-He Talks About the Late Confederacy.

Discussion on the Use of Certain Words.

From the Richmond Enquirer, September 1] A day or two ago a gentleman of this ity visited Fortress Monroe for the purpose of procuring some confiscated furniture, the property of his uncle (a dis-tinguished civilian and Confederate officer), having procured the necessary order from the proper authorities. Ar-riving at the Fortress he was narrowly catechised by a Federal officer, who asked him, among other questions, if "he had served in the rebel army."
"No, sir," sas the reply, "but," drawing himself up to his full hight, "I did have the honor of serving for four years in the army of the Confederate States of America." "I suppose you are acquainted with a good many rebel officers," resumed the questioner. "No, sir; I was not acquainted with any rebels, but I knew intimately many Confederate officers. He was at length admitted into the fortress and enjoyed two interviews with Mr. Davis, who now has the liberty of the fort during the day, unattended by any guard, although confined to his quarters and closely watched by night. District No. 4-Wm. Stovall. James Carroli.

He expressed the warmest sympathy for the sufferings and struggles of the gailant Confederate soldiers who, at the close of the war, had returned to ruined and desolated homes, to battle with poverty and all its attendant evils, and said that he often thought of them in the silent hours of the night, when sleep re-fused to visit his troubled eye-lids, but he felt assured that the same indomitable will and energy which carried them through such a war would in the end be crowned with competence and plenty.

Mr. Davis inquired eagerly after many personal friends, and sent kindly mes-sages to many. His health had, he said, somewhat improved within the last fortnight, but he was still very weak. In speaking of the disgraceful manacling affair, he said that he attached no blame to General Miles, who had simply obeyed instructions. He said, however, that orders to shackle him had been several times forwarded to the fortress, but that the officers postponed or evaded its execution. In regard to Dr. Craven's book, the doctor had, Mr. Davis said, put language into his mouth which was never SECRETARY SEWARD AT ROCHused by him, but the doctor's timidity prevented him from writing a truthful and accurate account of many conversations and circumstances. which our friend replied that, although ahead, let's hear you."] of boxing up all the confiscated furniture as soon as he should take command, and hold it subject to the orders of the authorities, furnishing his quarters himself, as he thought it disgraceful for United States officers to use furniture so acquired. Such conduct, so essentially different from the course pursued by many officers, proves that the new commander at the fortress is imbued by the honorable instincts which are supposed to characterize the profession of arms, and lead to the hope that the illustrious captive will be treated with the courtesy and consideration so natural to brave men, and which will alleviate in some degree the inevitable rigors of captivity.

GENERAL LEE.

High Tribute to his Character by an English Paper.

In a long editorial article calling for a subscription of £10,000 to Washington College by the friends and admirers of General Lee in England, the London Standard, of August 7th, speaks of him

There is no living hero-there are few, fany, among those whose names shine with the purest lustre in history-whose character has commanded so high a trib-ute of affection and admiration from their friends, of respect and honor from their foes, as that of General Lee. No life more perfectly heroic, no reputation more untarnished even by the minor blemishes which are not uncommonly found in union with the highest heroism, has ever been connected with a great national struggle. No shade of vanity or egotism, nothing of the self-will or petulance so often characteristic of conscious genius, no tinge of affectation, no taint even of the pride inseparable from ordinary greatness of mind, which can endure everything but humiliation, and regards submission as disgrace, alloy the simple granduer of the Virginia soldier's nature. A piety without the slight-est shadow of Pharisaism, a sense of duty to which the sacrifice of every personal feeling and interest appears a mat-ter of course, having marked his whole course and guided his every public act. whether as a soldier or a citizen. A tamily connection and the nearest living representative of the great champion of American Independence, General Lee has been the Washington of the Confederate war; like Washington, a man "whom envy dare not hate," but without even the one dark stain of doubt, if not of dishonor, which the death of Major Andre has left on the memory of his prototype. No more "selfless man and stainless gentleman" ever lived; no soldier ever set a more admirable example of the soldierly virtues of honor, chivalric generosity, and manly simplicity; no great man ever retired into obscurity, after witnessing alike the ruin of his cause and the destruction of his private fortune, with more of Christian patience

Of his military achievements, we need not speak. It is enough to say that nearly all his victories were won against enormous odds, and that his four years' defense of Virginia has few parallels in history as an example of great results accomplished with small means and at fearful disadvantage. What is now more interesting to remember is the personal Mr. Davis was in a conversational interesting to remember is the personal character of the man, as displayed in the various exigencies of that trying struggle; the simple honesty and kindly feeling which prompted him to consol his soldiers as they recoiled from the cannon-crowned heights of Gettysburg, with the assurance, "It is all my fault;" the unaffected self-depreciation which pronounced, when Stonewall Jackson I would wish, for the sake of our cause, that I had been disabled rather than you." the Christian chivalry, which, Virginia had been rendered a desert, withheld the army that invaded Penn-sylvania from inflicting the most trivial injury on person or property; which, when his own estates had been plundered, ravaged and confiscated, took care to enemies; the horror of useless blood-shed which withstood the cry for retribution excited by the murder of Southern prisoners in cold blood, and supported the resolve of the President that unless the actual murderers were taken no blood should be shed but on the field of battle; the touching unselfishness of his last words to his disbanding army on the sorrowful 9th of April, "I have done my best for you." But it was when all was over, when the chief of a great and long victorious army was a private man and a paroled prisoner—that the peculiar great-ness of Gen, Lee's nature shines out with unequaled brightness.

Interesting Reminiscence.

At the expiration of the interview General Miles asked the visitor what he thought of the looks of Mr. Davis, to sure my time has come? [Cries of "go

Think it was this spot; yes it was the following account of a queer case that occurred recently at Hannibal in I do not remember very well, perhaps that State: had he met him on the street.

Gen. M. remarked that it made no difference to him whether Mr. Davis was fat or lean, he simply obeyed orders, and he did not think the Richmond papers ought to be so severe upon his conduct. He seemed greatly nettled at the truthful and pungent criticisms of the Richmond papers ought to be so severe upon his conduct. He seemed greatly nettled at the truthful and pungent criticisms of the Richmond press, and several times reverted to the subject. Mr. Davis expresses himself highly gratified at the prospect San Francisco. All, Davis exposed thinself highly gratified at the prospect of the proposed change, as he has long known Gen. Killing and Burning.

From the Philadelphia Age.]
Parson Brownlow made a speech on Friday night last from the steps of the Leagne, in Broad street, in which he used the following atrocious language:

But I say to you in all candor, and with the knowledge of what I am saying, and the use that may be made of it, that if the wicked spirit of the South, the rebellious spirit, combined with the treachery and copperheadism of the North, shall bring upon this country another war, and force you, gentlemen, to leave your homes and families to invade the South and put down a second rebellion, I want to have something to say about the division of our forces the next time. I would divide your great army into three grand divisions. the first go armed and equipped as the laws of the army require, with small arms and artillery. Let that be the largest division and let them do the killing. Let the second division be armed with pine torches and spirits of turpen-tine, and let them do the burning. Let the third and last division be supplied with surveyors' compasses and chains, and we will survey out the land and set-tle it. We will first sell it out, pay the expenses of the war with the proceeds, and then settle it with men who will honor this glorious banner. [Great

It is almost incredible that any one wearing the human form would give utterance to such unchristian sentiments; but as the speaker belongs to the school of clerical fanatics who peefer the bayonet and torch to the Bible and prayer-book, it is, perhaps, not to be wondered at. The pity of it is, that in Philadelphia such language should be greeted with "great applause If, however, that army should ever to organized, the reverend orator who proposes it will not be found in the first or second division. His place will be in the third brigade, by the side of Butler - not at the post of danger, but where the spoils are gathered

Judge Advocate Holt-His Defense. Judge Advocate General Holt is so quent upon the exposure of his infamous transactions with Conover and his tribe that he has come out in an elaborate d fense, which appears as editorial in For ney's "two papers, both daily." His whole vindication against the charge of subornation of perjury, with a view to effect the sacrifice of an imprisoned man. consists in an assault on the veracity of the witnesses whom he himself intro-duced to prove Mr. Davis' guilt! According to the rules of court, a party is not allowed to discredit his own witnesses -yet in order to escape the most conincing proofs of his atrocious guilt, Mr Holt is compelled to turn against his confederates in crime, and claim that they are unworthy of belief! That such is their character is undoubtedly true, for they have confessed it themselves. They have confessed that when they swore as Mr. Holt wanted them to swear, they swore to unmitigated lies and were well paid for it. But even a perjurer may tell the truth; and while those wretches cannot be heard against Mr. Davis, their testimony is competent as against Mr. Holt. The whole theory of States' evidence " implies that a criminal may testify against against his accomplice. Mr. Holt, cannot, therefore, shake off his accessories in this manner Their testimony against him will need something much better than his denial to refute it-for his own character is under as black a cloud as theirs. Men will judge of their statement by the moral probabilities of its truth; and these are so strong and irresistible, that the name of Holt will henceforth rank among the worn-out and disgraced things.

It is free from smoke, dust, ashes, dirt and odor, and can be heated ready for use in less than half the time required by any other stove. All ladies who are opposed to roasting themselves while cooking their husbands dioners, are respectfully invited to cail and see it. All who wish to save money in the cost of fuel, to make cooking a pleasure, and home healthy, clean and comfortable, should call and see it.

The Petroleum will give a brilliant gas jet for twenty hours, tree from odor, smoke and soot, and needs neither chimney nor wick. It can be adapted to every kind of fixture, such as Gas Hands, Pendants, Chandellers, Brackets, etc. In short, it is the delight of hounokeepers and the ere-core of max companies.

The Petroleum Engine has so many advantages over every other steam engine, that it is almost impossible to enumerate them. It saves the wages of firemen, as the engine, that it is almost impossible to enumerate them. It saves the wages of firemen, as the engine, that it is almost impossible to enumerate them.
